

DAMAGING EVIDENCE AGAINST WEEDON

Prosecution Has No Eye-witness to Summon.

TESTIMONY CIRCUMSTANTIAL

Prisoner Seen About House Around the Time His Mother-in-Law Was Murdered Within.

Developments in the trial of Andrew Weedon, charged with the murder of his aged mother-in-law, Mrs. Rachel Ann Beall, during the week it has been going on in Criminal Court No. 2, marks this as one of the most interesting murder cases ever tried in Washington.

The evidence produced in court so far is purely circumstantial. It is, nevertheless, strong evidence of its kind. From what has come to light the indications are that District Attorney Beach and Assistant District Attorney Malloway, who are conducting the prosecution, will rest their case entirely upon that sort of evidence.

Forty Witnesses to Be Heard. Mr. Beach has, however, called his witnesses, of whom he has over forty summoned and in daily attendance in the witness room awaiting their turn on the stand, in such a manner as to indicate that the most important testimony is yet to come.

The most damaging testimony so far was given against the defendant by witnesses called on Friday afternoon, just before Judge Gould ordered a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow. Prior to the testimony of these witnesses, who told of seeing Weedon at the back gate of Mrs. Beall's home and in the alley back of the house with a pistol in his hand, from which he was drawing empty shells, there was no evidence by which the defendant could be convicted, no matter how much suspicion was cast upon him.

A Net of Evidence. The prosecution is weaving a net about the accused from which his attorneys will find it difficult to extricate him. It has been proven by members of the dead woman's immediate household that Weedon scarcely knew his mother-in-law, and that he had never been to the house where she lived. It has also been shown that he went to that house on the day of the homicide, and at a time when no one but Mrs. Beall was there.

A motive has been shown. Testimony has been forthcoming to the effect that Weedon had a revolver in his possession a few days before the crime was committed.

What the defense will show when the Government rests its case is not known. Whether Attorneys A. A. Lipscomb and J. Edward Mitchell will attempt to prove an alibi for Weedon, whether they will file the ground that the evidence against the man is insufficient, or whether they will, as their cross-examination of the Government witnesses has sometimes indicated, attempt to show that members of the dead woman's immediate family acted in a suspicious manner on the day of Mrs. Beall's death remains to be seen.

Widow's Property for Life. Rachel Beall was the widow of Charles Beall, who owned real estate in this city. When he died, some years ago, he left a row of houses on Ninth Street southeast. By terms of his will his widow was to receive the income from the rent of the houses as long as she lived. Upon her death they were to go to his sons and daughters.

One of these daughters is the wife of Andrew Weedon. She is a daughter of her father's first wife. The dead woman was his second wife. With her husband, Mrs. Weedon occupied one of the houses in this row, 26 Ninth Street southeast, which was rented from the Beall estate.

In September, 1900, the Weedons got behind with their rent. Matters went from bad to worse. Mrs. Minnie Beall, one of the daughters, who was agent for the property, served a thirty-day notice on them to move out.

The Motive Ascribed. The house in which the Weedons lived came to Mrs. Weedon upon the death of her mother. This was provided for by the will of Charles Beall. Therein lies the motive ascribed to Weedon by the prosecution.

Weedon was very bitter at the idea of being put out. His brother-in-law, Warren Beall, who was his great friend, he once said:

"They may put me out, but they will never put my wife and child out."

The prosecution takes this utterance to have been a threat, pregnant with prophecy. Weedon was taken from that house to the city jail, while his wife remains there, the house having become her property when her stepmother died.

Showed a Revolver. A few days before the murder, Weedon, while walking down the street with Warren Beall, showed him a revolver and a box of cartridges. Two days before the murder, while Warren Beall, Jr., was at his house, he showed the revolver to him, also, and asked him to come out to the back shed and shoot it. This the boy did. When he had fired the revolver Weedon, according to the testimony of Warren Beall, Jr., asked him:

"Does that look like it would go through flesh?"

"Why, certainly it would," was the reply the boy says he made.

"Do you think it would go through old gray-headed?"

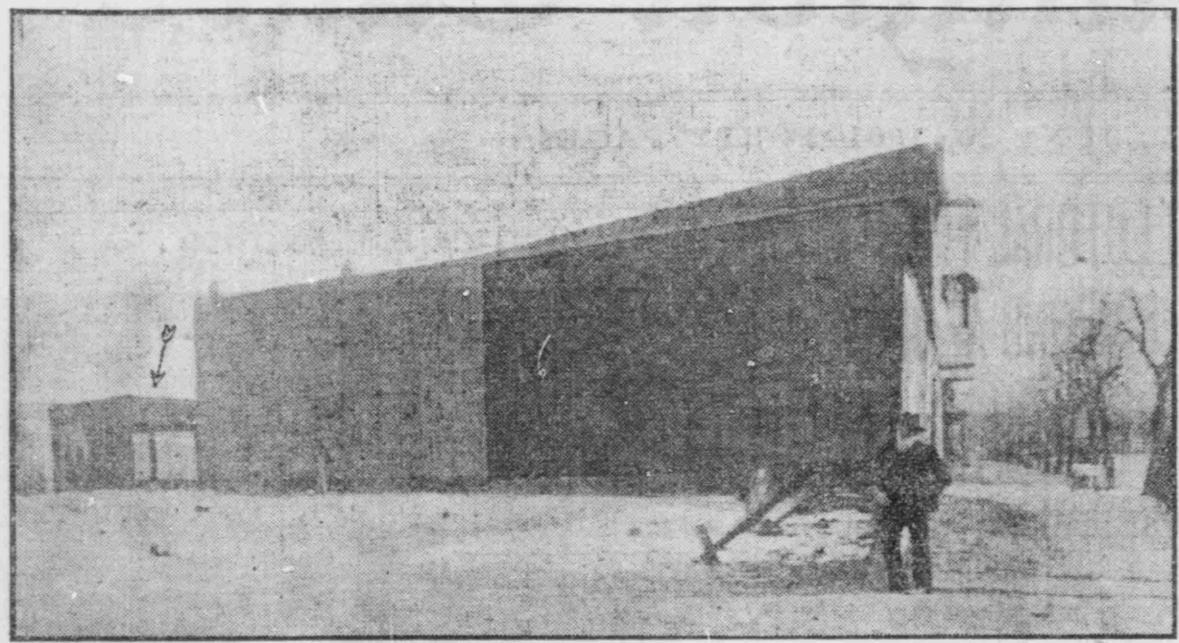

Weedon's next question.

"Sure," was the answer young Beall says he gave.

These circumstances, together with Weedon's expressed hatred of the Beall family, and his once avowed intention to blow up the house in which Mrs. Rachel Beall lived, are what the District Attorney told the jury showed Weedon's incentive in the crime.

In Unfinished House. Mrs. Beall lived with her married daughter, Mrs. Charles Oelrichs, at 1244 H Street northeast. The house was unfinished. From the testimony of Mrs. Oelrichs and of her husband and two nieces, Virginia and Grace Douglas, the family lived mostly in the kitchen during the day.

CORTELYOU STARTS ON HIS HOMEWARD TRIP

Appointment of Executive Committee of Nine, His First Official Work, Still Several Weeks Off.

National Chairman George B. Cortelyou has not yet returned to Washington, but began the homeward journey from Chicago yesterday, expecting to come as far as Indianapolis with Senator Fairbanks. A big reception had been planned for the Indianan, and the new chairman wished to join in it and size up the Hoosier enthusiasm.

Until Mr. Cortelyou's resignation takes effect, July 1, he will not make any political announcements. Even when free of his Cabinet duties he will await the conclusion of the Democratic National Convention before making public the campaign program.

No Hurry About Starting. The first announcement expected is that of the executive committee of the national campaign committee. Chairman Cortelyou may wait several weeks before announcing this important board. The late Chairman Hanna waited a month before deciding on its personnel.

Nine members will constitute the executive committee. These men will have the alley, and the other at the side of the yard, which opens into a vacant lot at the side of the house. Next door is a flat.

When Mrs. Beall was found she was lying dead on the floor of the kitchen, her head and the upper half of her body under the stove, in which a fire was burning. There were bullet wounds in her arms, which led to the belief that she held her hands in front of her in an effort to ward off the attack of the assailant. Other bullet holes were in her breast and head.

Found by Her Daughter. Mrs. Oelrichs testified that she, herself, found the body upon her return from market, shortly after 12 o'clock on December 11.

On that day, according to the testimony of Mrs. Oelrichs, and her husband and her two nieces, everyone but Mrs. Beall left the house before 9 o'clock. At 8 o'clock Mrs. Oelrichs left to go to the H. B. Building, where he was working as an engineer. At 8:50 Mrs. Oelrichs and Grace Douglas left the house together. They parted, the girl going to school and Mrs. Oelrichs downtown.

When Mrs. Oelrichs returned home a little after 12 she found her mother dead. Within a very few minutes her husband came in. Together they dragged the body to the front room, and laid it on the floor.

Police Not Notified. Then Oelrichs went to the War Department after Everett Beall, his brother-in-law, who worked there. They came back together. Soon after Beall left, Mr. and Mrs. Oelrichs went to work to put the house in order. They did not report the matter to the police. Mrs. Oelrichs immediately declared her suspicion that Weedon had committed the crime.

About 2 o'clock the police heard of the murder, and entered the house. The body was taken to the morgue. Mr. and Mrs. Oelrichs were taken to the Ninth precinct stationhouse, where they were detained.

Leaving the members of Mrs. Beall's household and coming to the neighbors who testified, the most damaging evidence is found. Fredonia Miles, an elderly negro woman, lived in the court just back of the Oelrichs house.

Her testimony was to the effect that she had seen Weedon go in at the side gate of the back yard of the Oelrichs house, shortly before 10 o'clock. She did not see him come out. In the court-room on Friday the negro woman identified Weedon, without hesitation, as the man she saw on that day.

Unloading a Revolver. Little Willie Adam, a white boy, while on an errand for his mother that morning, saw Weedon unloading a revolver in the alley. He also pointed out Weedon to the man he had seen.

Mrs. Millie C. Toomey, who lives on Florida Avenue, between Thirtieth and Fourteenth Streets northeast, and whose back yard runs to the alley opposite the back yard of the Oelrichs house, went out to look for her little boy that morning. While looking through the gate of her back shed, she saw a man throwing shells out of a revolver. Weedon, she said, was the man. It was a few minutes past 10 when she saw this.

The testimony of Joseph C. Toomey, Mrs. Toomey's husband, was to the effect that upon his return home from work that day, his wife gave him three empty 38-caliber shells, which their little boy had picked up in the alley.

This is practically all the evidence that has gone in against Weedon. It is probable, however, that more will come tomorrow and next day. On Tuesday the Government will doubtless rest its case. Then will appear the line of defense Weedon's attorneys will set up.

To Tell the Good News. The notification of the President by the committee, headed by Speaker Cannon, will take place July 27, at Oyster Bay. This pilgrimage to the President's summer home will be the third time that a committee has waited on Theodore Roosevelt at "Sagamore Hill" to notify him of his nomination for high office. Such a committee tendered Colonel Roosevelt the nomination for governor of New York in the fall of 1898. Two years later, when Governor Roosevelt was nominated for Vice President, another notification committee journeyed to Oyster Bay. The road up Sagamore Hill has become a beaten path for great Republican statesmen and leaders.

Senator Fairbanks will be notified of his nomination on August 3, at his Indianapolis home.

HELEN KELLAR DECLINES
PART IN GLASS DAY

Said to Have Been Piqued Because She Did Not Get the Highest Honor.

BOSTON, June 25.—Radcliff's class day exercises, to which no one is admitted except the students and members of the alumnae, were held today in the gymnasium. Anna Wellington was class historian. Miss Frances Newell, poet; Miss Helen Dearborn, class prophet; and Miss Helen C. McCleary, class lawyer.

Helen Kellar, the famous blind girl, is a member of the graduating class. She was elected class lawyer, but upon being informed that the college faculty had refused to give the full degree of "magna cum laude" and would allow her merely the "cum laude" she refused to take part in the class day exercises.

PLAN TO SAVE LIVES ON RIVER STEAMERS

Anonymous Writer Would Have Cable Attached Near Water Line to Which Persons Could Cling.

A plan to save lives in case of accidents on our local excursion steamers like that which claimed hundreds of victims on the General Slocum in New York harbor, is what was submitted to District Commissioner Macfarland yesterday by an anonymous writer.

His plan is to have a cable "on each side of the boat, fastened at the bow and stern, and hanging rather near the water, the cables having dependant from them ropes two or three feet in length, with large knots at the ends."

The idea is to give the passengers who jump over the sides of the boat something to which they can cling until the rescuers come up. It is pointed out that the use of such cables as safety appliances for all excursion boats would cost little, and would not be much trouble.

BALTIMORE DETECTIVE GIVES UP THE SEARCH

Believes Julius Schaumlöffel, Wanted in Monumental City, Is Not Hiding at Capital.

Unable to find any trace of T. Julius Schaumlöffel, who is wanted in Baltimore on charges of obtaining money under false pretenses and forgery, Detective Armstrong, who has been in Washington since last Wednesday looking for the missing man returned to the Monumental city last evening. It is believed that Schaumlöffel left Washington, if he ever was here, on the day he appeared before a notary and signed an affidavit, in which he declared that he was innocent of all the wrong-doing charged against him.

When the Baltimore authorities learned that he had signed the affidavit before a local notary, whose office is less than a block from Police Headquarters, they hastened Armstrong to Washington. Schaumlöffel was traced to boarding house in Southwest Washington, and the boarding-house keeper recognized his picture and positively identified him. The notary was equally sure of his ground. Despite the facts Armstrong and the detectives detailed by Captain Boardman to assist him in whatever way they could, were unable to "get a line" on the man they were looking for.

Schaumlöffel is alleged to have defrauded several building and loan associations in Baltimore out of large sums of money by issuing bogus deeds and mortgages. He contended in his affidavit that he is not guilty of the charges made against him.

HARVARD BUTLER
INVITES TO WEDDING

Man Popular With Students Puts Notice in College Daily Inviting Friends.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 25.—Because he has more personal friends among Harvard's students than the dean himself, and because it would cost him several hundred dollars to send out engraved invitations to all of them, William Roland Walker, better known as "Butler," inserted in the columns of the "Harvard Daily Crimson," a notice requesting the presence of "all members of the university" at his marriage to Miss Mary Theresa Deland, of Boston, at St. Paul's rectory, Holyoke Street, Cambridge, June 30, at 7:30 o'clock.

"Butler" is the famous "hot-dog" dispenser, and fancy-drink compounder in the luncheon of the Harvard Union—the university club. Without doubt he is the most popular character Harvard has ever had, and his wedding promises to be a unique event.

Gifts have already begun to flow in, and it looks as if the genial lunch tender would be swamped with them. They come from all quarters of the globe, from the Philippines and Japan. One present is a wedding trip to the St. Louis Exposition, which some interested graduates living in Cambridge have provided.

SLEEP-WALKING WOMAN
FALLS TO HER DEATH

PHILADELPHIA, June 25.—While asleep, shortly after midnight yesterday morning, Mrs. Amelia Mawr, eighty-four years old, walked out of a second-story window to a shed roof at her home, 111 Collins Avenue, West Collingswood, and falling to the ground received injuries from which she died a few minutes afterward. The distance from the roof to the ground is but eight feet.

The aged woman's cries for help brought her into the house, where she became unconscious, and expired before the arrival of a physician. Coroner Litchfield gave a certificate of death from heart disease.

BANDIT HELD UP STAGEFUL. SILVER CITY, Idaho, June 25.—A lone bandit with a shotgun held up the stage to Murphy, near the "Summit," a few miles from this place. Nine passengers were forced to alight and give up their valuables. The robber then demanded the mail-bag, which he ran off with. The bandit wore a black mask and his shoes were covered with cloth to prevent leaving a track. Sheriff McDonald and a posse are in pursuit.

Dr. Reyburn Will Fight For District Suffrage

Failing to Impress His Views Upon the Platform Committee at Chicago, He Will Urge Reform Upon Congress.

National Committeeman Dr. Robert Reyburn returned to Washington yesterday from Chicago, well pleased with the action of the convention with regard to the candidates selected and the platform adopted. Dr. Reyburn and John F. Cook, however, were much disappointed over the failure to have the convention insert in the platform a plank declaring for suffrage in the District of Columbia. Dr. Reyburn, however, did not seem to be able to blame any individual or group of individuals for the failure of his scheme to go through. Asked about his plans for the future, Dr. Reyburn said that the fight for suffrage would be taken before Congress when that body meets in December. A bill will be introduced re-establishing a local government.

"While there was much enthusiasm at the convention," said Dr. Reyburn, "there was really little excitement. It was a foregone conclusion that President Roosevelt would be nominated; so all of the contesting that goes on while Presidential candidates are being named was missing. However, all delegates were pleased with the way things were going, and with the completed ticket and platform.

"I think we of the District of Columbia were about the only delegates who were disappointed in the drawing of the platform. We were practically certain that the plank for suffrage in the District would be inserted, but the committee ignored it, not because there was any real opposition to suffrage, but because they did not think it the proper time or place to act.

"However, we will take the question before Congress, and will fight it out there. A bill will be introduced at the coming session, and we hope to have it passed before the session ends."

NON-PENSIONED VETERANS
SMALL UNKNOWN ARMY

Number of Survivors Who Will Come Under New Law Estimated at Less Than 20,000.

Tables were completed at the Pension Office yesterday to be included in the report for the year ending June 30 that show the proportions of the "unknown army"—those men who are eligible to pensions under the new law, but who have never applied for Government aid. It is nowhere near as large as was expected. Though the new law has been in effect for nearly three months, and the Pension Office authorities have been endeavoring to have this class of veterans apply for the pensions due them, less than 5,000 applications have been filed.

It was estimated by members of Congress and the pension officers that there were at least 150,000 of the former members of the armies of the civil war who were unaccounted for on the rolls. Now, however, the estimate has been revised, and it was said yesterday that there are not more than 20,000 old soldiers alive who are not pensioners.

The small number of applications indicates, the officers of the bureau say, that the death rate has been much higher of late years among the veterans than has been suspected.

BREAKS LEG TRYING TO BOARD STREET CAR

Colonel Kirkman Thrown Heavily to the Pavement While Jumping on Foot Board.

Col. Joel T. Kirkman, U. S. A., retired, fell from the running board of a north-bound Connecticut Avenue car in attempting to board it while in motion between Q and R Streets northwest, last evening. His entire weight was thrown upon his left leg and that member was fractured.

Police of the Tenth precinct summoned the ambulance from the Emergency Hospital, and Dr. Hymson made an examination, finding a fracture near the ankle.

Colonel Kirkman refused to be taken to the hospital and was conveyed to his home, 217 Kalamazoo Avenue northwest, where the family physician made an examination, finding a fracture near the ankle.

Owing to Colonel Kirkman's age, sixty-five years, it is believed he may be permanently injured. He was reported to be resting quietly at a late hour last evening.

WIND WRECKS TENTS; A HUNDRED INJURED

Thunderstorm at Brighton, Mass., Works Great Havoc at a Lawn Party.

BOSTON, June 25.—A terrific thunderstorm of tropical suddenness burst over Boston and the surrounding portions of Massachusetts this evening and during the short time it lasted did damage estimated at upward of $100,000.

No lives were lost, but more than a hundred people were injured.

The greatest injury was done at Brighton, where a lawn party was in progress. A large tent occupied all the smaller ones had been occupied all the afternoon, by more than 1,200 persons.

At the first puff of strong wind the big tent collapsed and the smaller tents followed suit. Under the canvas were several hundred people, mostly women and children, who became panic-stricken.

In the struggle many were badly bruised.
